

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

32 Avenue of the Americas, New York NY 10013

Cambridge University Press is part of the University of Cambridge.

It furthers the University's mission by disseminating knowledge in the pursuit of education, learning, and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9781107127036

© Mimi Hanaoka 2016

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2016

Printed in the United Kingdom by Clays, St Ives plc

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication data

Names: Hanaoka, Mimi, author.

Title: Authority and identity in medieval Islamic historiography : Persian histories from the peripheries / Mimi Hanaoka.

Description: New York : Cambridge University Press, 2016. | Series: Cambridge studies in Islamic civilization | Includes bibliographical references and index.

Identifiers: LCCN 2016013911 | ISBN 9781107127036 (Hardback)

Subjects: LCSH: Iran—History—640-1256—Historiography. | Iran—History—1256-1500—Historiography. | Turkey—History—To 1453—Historiography.

Classification: LCC DS288 .H36 2016 | DDC 955.0072—dc23 LC record available at <https://lccn.loc.gov/2016013911>

ISBN 978-1-107-12703-6 Hardback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party Internet Web sites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such Web sites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

Contents

Preface	page ix
Acknowledgments	xi
Journal and Reference Works Abbreviations	xv
1 Introduction	1
2 Methodologies for Reading Hybrid Identities and Imagined Histories	13
3 Contexts and Authorship	36
4 Dreaming of the Prophet	70
5 Holy Bloodlines, Prophetic Utterances, and Taxonomies of Belonging	99
6 Living Virtues of the Land	138
7 Sacred Bodies and Sanctified Cities	168
8 Prophetic Etymologies and Sacred Spaces	204
9 The View from Anatolia	220
10 Lessons from the Peripheries	251
Bibliography	261
Index	297

Authority and Identity in Medieval Islamic Historiography

Intriguing dreams, improbable myths, fanciful genealogies, and suspect etymologies. These were all key elements of the historical texts composed by scholars and bureaucrats on the peripheries of Islamic empires between the tenth and fifteenth centuries. But how are historians to interpret such narratives? And what can these more literary histories tell us about the people who wrote them and the times in which they lived? In this book, Mimi Hanaoka offers an innovative, interdisciplinary method of approaching these sorts of local histories from the Persianate world. By paying attention to the purpose and intention behind a text's creation, her book highlights the preoccupation with authority to rule and legitimacy within disparate regional, provincial, ethnic, sectarian, ideological, and professional communities. By reading these texts in such a way, Hanaoka transforms the literary patterns of these fantastic histories into rich sources of information about identity, rhetoric, authority, legitimacy, and centre–periphery relations.

Mimi Hanaoka is Assistant Professor of Religious Studies at the University of Richmond, where she is a scholar of history and religion. Her publications include scholarly journal articles on Persian and Islamic history and historiography. Her work as a social and cultural historian focuses on Iran and the Persianate world from the tenth to fifteenth centuries, concentrating on issues of authority and identity. In the field of global history, she concentrates on interactions between the Middle East and East Asia, focusing on the history of Iran–Japan relations.

Cambridge Studies in Islamic Civilization

Editorial Board

Chase F. Robinson, The Graduate Center, The City University of New York
(general editor)

David O. Morgan, Professor Emeritus, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Shahab Ahmed, Harvard University

Virginia Aksan, McMaster University

Michael Cook, Princeton University

Peter Jackson, Keele University

Other titles in the series are listed at the back of the book.

Authority and Identity in Medieval Islamic Historiography

Persian Histories from the Peripheries

MIMI HANAOKA
University of Richmond

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

32 Avenue of the Americas, New York NY 10013

Cambridge University Press is part of the University of Cambridge.

It furthers the University's mission by disseminating knowledge in the pursuit of education, learning, and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9781107127036

© Mimi Hanaoka 2016

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2016

Printed in the United Kingdom by Clays, St Ives plc

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication data

Names: Hanaoka, Mimi, author.

Title: Authority and identity in medieval Islamic historiography : Persian histories from the peripheries / Mimi Hanaoka.

Description: New York : Cambridge University Press, 2016. | Series: Cambridge studies in Islamic civilization | Includes bibliographical references and index.

Identifiers: LCCN 2016013911 | ISBN 9781107127036 (Hardback)

Subjects: LCSH: Iran—History—640-1256—Historiography. | Iran—History—1256-1500—Historiography. | Turkey—History—To 1453—Historiography.

Classification: LCC DS288 .H36 2016 | DDC 955.0072—dc23 LC record available at <https://lccn.loc.gov/2016013911>

ISBN 978-1-107-12703-6 Hardback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party Internet Web sites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such Web sites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

For my parents,
Shoichiro Hanaoka (1945–2014) and Iola Price Hanaoka (1942–2014)

Contents

Preface	page	ix
Acknowledgments		xi
Journal and Reference Works Abbreviations		xv
1 Introduction		1
2 Methodologies for Reading Hybrid Identities and Imagined Histories		13
3 Contexts and Authorship		36
4 Dreaming of the Prophet		70
5 Holy Bloodlines, Prophetic Utterances, and Taxonomies of Belonging		99
6 Living Virtues of the Land		138
7 Sacred Bodies and Sanctified Cities		168
8 Prophetic Etymologies and Sacred Spaces		204
9 The View from Anatolia		220
10 Lessons from the Peripheries		251
Bibliography		261
Index		297

Preface

The primary sources used in this study are written in Arabic, Persian, and are often bilingual to varying degrees. I follow the International Journal of Middle Eastern Studies (IJMES) transliteration system for Arabic transliterations, and consequently I do not indicate the final tā' marbuṭa, nor do I distinguish between the alif mamdūda and alif maqṣūra. For Persian terms, I use a modified IJMES transliteration system. In bilingual Arabic-Persian sources, I generally prioritize the Arabic transliteration. Due to the bilingual nature of the texts and the accompanying challenges in transliteration, I hope I will be forgiven for any inconsistencies and preferences.

Place names appear without transliteration (e.g., Tabaristan, Bukhara, Qum). When technical terms and place names used in English are part of a proper noun, such as the title of a work (e.g., Tārīkh-i Ṭabaristān), I include diacritical marks. Therefore, the title of the work Tārīkh-i Bukhārā includes diacritical marks, as does historical personage al-Bukhārī, but Bukhara as a place does not. Proper names of people and the names by which they are known, including titles, are supplied with diacritical marks (e.g., Fāṭima, Fāṭima al-Ma'ṣūma, Muḥammad).

Commonly used technical terms appear without transliteration. With the exception of Imam, Shi'a, Shi'i, Shi'ism, Sunni, and Sunnism, the terms are italicized (e.g., Ahl al-Bayt, Allah, amir, Baraka, dinar, fatwa, fiqh, fuqaha, hadith, imam, isnad, madrassa, Mahdi, matn, muhaddith, qadi, sayyid, sharif, shaykh, Shu'ubiya, sunna, Sura, ulama, umma, waqf, wazir). I have referenced the IJMES Word List for guidance on which terms and names are Anglicized.

x Preface

I do not transliterate technical terms and titles that are commonly used in English, including Anglicized terms of Arabic origin (e.g., Abbasid, Alawi, ‘Alid, Ash‘ari, bazaar, Buyids, caliph, Daylami, Fatimid, Ghaznavid, Ghurid, Hanafi, Imam, Isma‘ili, Jahiliya, Mamluk, Qur’an, Safavid, Saffarid, Sasanian, Seljuq, shah, Sufi, sultan, Tahirid, Talibi, Umayyad, vizier, Zaydi, Ziyarid).

I have included diacritical marks on less commonly used technical terms (e.g., abdāl, akhbār, awliyā’, awqāf, a‘yān, dā‘ī, faḍā’il, ghulām, ijāza, khabar, khāngāh, khawārij, maḍhāhib, madhhab, mashhad, mawlā, mihna, mazār, mi‘rāj, rāwī, riwāyah, Rūm, ṣaḥāba, Ṣaḥīḥayn, ṭabaqāt, tābi‘ūn, tafsīr, tariqa, ‘umarā’, ziyārat).

For proper names, I retain the definite article “al-” at the beginning of a name only at the first mention of the proper name but exclude the definite article on subsequent mentions of the proper name (e.g., the name is rendered as al-Qummī on first mention and then subsequently as Qummī). I do not consider the “al-” for bibliographic purposes (e.g., Ḥasan ibn Muḥammad al-Qummī appears al-Qummī, Ḥasan ibn Muḥammad, under “Q”).

I generally give the Common Era (CE) dates for events. Whenever relevant, I also give the hijrī dates in the form of hijrī/CE dates (e.g., 613/1217, third/ninth century). When there are disagreements or disputes about dates, I attempt to note the range of possible dates and generally follow the dates used in the Encyclopedia of Islam, 2nd edition.

For the Qur’an, I principally reference the English translation by Ahmed Ali, final revised edition (Princeton University Press, 2001).

Acknowledgments

This book has been supported and enriched by many people, and I am grateful and indebted for all of the help I have received. I owe much to the insights, support, and suggestions of my mentors, peers, friends, and colleagues, but all faults, deficiencies, and defects in scholarship are entirely my own. I bear full responsibility for this book's shortcomings.

At Columbia University, where I completed the dissertation out of which this book grew, I benefited from the mentorship and training of many exceptional faculty. Peter Awn and Richard Bulliet were ideal guides on this journey, and they saw the project through all its iterations, from the kernel of an idea to a completed dissertation. Hossein Kamaly at Barnard College, Mehdi Khorrami at NYU, and Masoud Jafari Jazi at the Institute for Advanced Studies at Princeton University expertly shared with me the nuances and rigors of classical Persian literature.

In the field of Arabic language and literature, I benefited from the expertise of Taoufik Ben-Amor, George Saliba, and George El-Hage at Columbia University. At the Center for Arabic Studies Abroad (CASA) at the American University in Cairo, I enjoyed the superb training and unflagging patience of Zeinab Taha, Hebatallah Salem, Azza Hassanein, Raghda El-Essawi, Shereen El-Ezabi, Nevenka Korica, Mahmoud Al-Batal, and Abbas Al-Tonsi.

Elizabeth Castelli and members of the Departments of Religion at Columbia University and Barnard College generously shared their expertise and advice on my research. Nequin Yavari at The New School provided consistent encouragement during my graduate training. Members of Columbia University's Middle East and North Africa (MENA) workshop offered thoughtful critiques, insights, and a space to share works in progress. The staff of the Columbia University Libraries enabled much of the research necessary for this project.

xii Acknowledgments

The Jacob K. Javits Fellowship and the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences of Columbia University supported my doctoral work at Columbia University. The CASA and the American Institute of Iranian Studies provided financial support for training in Arabic and Persian.

Friends and colleagues have allowed me to present works in progress, and they have challenged me to refine and rethink my work. Kazuo Morimoto at the Institute for Advanced Studies on Asia, The University of Tokyo, generously invited me to present part of my research on dreams in 2012. Michael Pregill at Boston University was a thoughtful colloquium interlocutor for an early version of Chapter 4. I explored part of my research on dreams in my 2013 article in Iranian Studies and a limited version of the ideas presented in Chapter 2 in my 2015 article in the Journal of Persianate Studies. The audience and panelists at the annual meetings of the Middle East Studies Association (MESA) and American Academy of Religion (AAR) provided valuable feedback. I am grateful to fellow CASA alumna Kate Swearengen, who read through a manuscript draft in its entirety, efficiently and thoroughly, and offered thoughtful comments.

At the University of Richmond, my colleagues both within and beyond the Department of Religious Studies encouraged this project. The Office of the Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences and the Faculty Research Council of the School of Arts and Sciences provided financial support for this project. The staff of Boatwright Memorial Library, and especially the Inter-Library Loan department, enabled me to access many materials necessary to develop and complete this work.

At Cambridge University Press, William Masami Hammell gave me the opportunity to transform my manuscript into a book, an endeavor that Maria Marsh brings to fruition. The anonymous readers who read my manuscript and generously offered valuable comments and critiques greatly improved this work.

In Tokyo, I received extraordinary support and kindness from Machiko Romaine and Kazuko Nishikawa, as well as Tim Thornton and the faculty and staff of the American School in Japan.

At home, Shahan Mufti has been a well of kindness: loving, helpful, and supportive. Through challenges and in happiness, he has been there throughout. With their unlimited love, Totoro and Mochi bring joy to every day.

Acknowledgments

xiii

I owe my deepest debt of gratitude to my parents, Shoichiro Hanaoka (1945–2014) and Iola Price Hanaoka (1942–2014). They supported every aspect of my life with unconditional love, boundless generosity, and tireless encouragement. There is a Japanese proverb (sode furi au mo tashō no en), which states that those whose sleeves so much as brush against each other in this life have been bound together in many previous lifetimes. I hope that I will have the good fortune to meet them in future lifetimes, too. I dedicate this book to them.

Journal and Reference Works Abbreviations

BSOAS	Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies
EI2	Encyclopedia of Islam, Second Edition
EI3	Encyclopedia of Islam, Third Edition
EIr	Encyclopedia Iranica
EQ	Encyclopaedia of the Quran
IJMES	International Journal of Middle Eastern Studies
JAOS	Journal of the American Oriental Society
JSAI	Jerusalem Studies in Arabic and Islam
JRAS	Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society

I

Introduction

Whosoever sees me in a dream sees me in waking life, because Satan does not take my appearance.<sup>1</sup>

Nearly 200 years after the Prophet Muḥammad died, he reappeared in the city of Bukhara in present day Uzbekistan. Muḥammad wore a white cap<sup>2</sup> on his head as he rode his camel al-Qaswā' into the central bazaar of Kharqān.<sup>3</sup> A large crowd gathered around Muḥammad, overjoyed that the Prophet of Islam had come to their city located on what was then the far eastern fringe of the Islamic empire. Muḥammad, the seal of the Prophets and the last of God's messengers, to whom God transmitted the final revelation in the form of the Qur'an through the Angel Gabriel, had come to their city. The Bukharans were delighted.

<sup>1</sup> Muḥammad ibn Ismā'īl al-Bukhārī (810–870), Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī; Jam' jawāmi' al-abādīth wa-al-asānīd wa-makniz al-ṣiḥāḥ wa-al-sunan wa-al-masānīd, 3 vols. (Vaduz, Liechtenstein: Jam'iyat al-Maknaz al-Islāmī, 2000), Kitāb 92 al-ta'bir, Bāb 10, p. 1415, hadīth 7079.

<sup>2</sup> Narshakhī describes Muḥammad as wearing a “kulāh-i safīd,” and kulāh is the general Persian term for a cap, though it could also more specifically mean a high or medium high soft cap. The kulāh and the qalansuwa – a cap worn either under a turban or by itself – were both part of a typical medieval Persian costume. Both items are distinct from the turban ('imāma or dulband). Y. K. Stillman, N. A. Stillmann, and T. Majda, “Libās,” EI2. See also W. Björkman, “Tulband,” EI2; W. Björkman, “Qalansuwa,” EI2.

<sup>3</sup> The female camel is known as al-Qaswā', al-Jad'ā', or al-'Adbā'. Ṭabarī, The History of al-Ṭabarī, vol. IX; The Last Years of the Prophet: The Formation of the State A.D. 630–632/A.H. 8–11, translated by, Ismail K. Poonawala (Albany, NY: State University of New York Press, 1990), 150–151.

2 Introduction

The assembled multitude decided to lodge the Prophet in the home of a certain Khwāja Imām Abū Ḥafṣ al-Bukhārī, a pious and praiseworthy man who was a prominent denizen of the city. Khwāja Imām Abū Ḥafṣ was a learned ascetic who had pursued his religious studies in Baghdad. After returning from Iraq to Bukhara, he had become one of the honored teachers in his home city. Khwāja Imām Abū Ḥafṣ hosted Muḥammad in his home. In a fitting tribute to his illustrious guest, he recited the Qur’an for Muḥammad for three days and three nights. In fact, it is unknown if he did anything else during those three days when he hosted the Prophet. The Prophet listened in silence. Muḥammad never once corrected Khwāja Imām Abū Ḥafṣ, since his recitation of the revelation was flawless.

The events in the preceding story read like fantasy. But they are real, in so far as they occurred within someone’s dream, which was then recounted in Tārīkh-i Bukhārā, a medieval Central Asian book of local history.<sup>4</sup> Such dream narratives, which appear in various forms of historical writing in the medieval Islamic world, are an overlooked thread in a gauzy gossamer web of references, one of myriad tensile cultural strands that reinforced and reflected one another in the once glistening and now dusty web of early Islamic historical writing. The fantastical nature of this encounter with the Prophet did not make it any less significant for the author, al-Narshakhī, who included this episode in his history about the city of Bukhara. Muḥammad ibn Salām Baikandī, the man who is credited with dreaming the encounter, lived in a milieu in which pious dreams – especially those involving Muḥammad – were as real and as significant as events that occurred during waking life. But what do we – as historians, scholars, and modern readers – do with such a history penned more than a millennium ago, which records events that may be imagined or may never have transpired?

Positivist history has been the dominant trend over the past century in scholarship on the history of Islam. Scholarship on the political, military, economic, legal, and social history of the Islamicate world has traditionally placed a high premium on ascertaining the names, dates, facts, and figures that allow us to reconstruct history and what precisely happened.

<sup>4</sup> Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Ja‘far Al-Narshakhī, Tārīkh-i Bukhārā, edited by, Mudarris Razavi (Tehran: Bunyād-i Farhang-i Īrān, 1972), 77–81; Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Ja‘far Al-Narshakhī, The History of Bukhara; Translated From a Persian Abridgement of the Arabic Original by Narshakhī, edited and translated by Richard N. Frye (Cambridge, MA: Mediaeval Academy of America, 1954) 56–59.

This line of scholarship has been invaluable in providing a narrative history of the emergence and development of Islam as a social, military, political, legal, and religious phenomenon. It has allowed us to contextualize the early Islamic community within its Late Antique milieu and to trace the expansion of Islam over vast expanses of land during the early centuries of Islamic rule.

This traditional positivist approach forms the bedrock from which to further investigate the various and complex dimensions of the Islamicate world that have developed during the past 1400 years. As we move beyond the questions of “what happened, and why?” we are able to engage with the thorny, more open-ended questions of “how did these communities perceive themselves and the others around them, and how did they crystallize and express these understandings?” Following the latter, more open-ended line of research, this project pays close attention to the purpose and intention behind a text’s creation and what the texts reveal about how their authors perceived themselves and the world around them. These are insights that can be gleaned, in significant part, from the themes, claims, references, and strategies evident in the texts themselves.

Over the past three decades, scholars have paid increasingly closer attention to the political and literary dimensions of Islamicate historical writing produced in the medieval Middle East. These scholars include Stephen Humphreys, Stefan Leder, Albrecht Noth, Fred Donner, Jacob Lassner, Chase Robinson, John Wansbrough, Patricia Crone, Michael Cook, Richard Bulliet, Tayeb El-Hibri, Julie Meisami, and Christopher Melchert, all of whom have pioneered fruitful methodological approaches to Islamic history and place a premium on considering why medieval authors presented themselves and their histories in that way that they did.

In line with this turn in scholarship away from primarily positivist history, this project builds on existing scholarly assumptions and proposes an innovative method of approaching local histories of the Persiate world written in Arabic and Persian. This approach – freed from the reconstruction of events as the primary goal of scholarly endeavor – allows the sources to be read and used in new ways to understand how these Perso-Muslim individuals and communities understood and expressed their hybrid identities, perched on the fringes and peripheries of the Islamic empire. The intriguing dreams, fanciful genealogies, and suspect etymologies are transformed from data-poor curiosities into rich sources of information about identity, rhetoric, authority, legitimacy, and center-periphery relations.

4 Introduction

PERIPHERIES AND EMPIRES

Texts composed by scholars and bureaucrats on the peripheries of Islamic empires during the tenth to early fifteenth centuries provide, along with the hard facts of history, richly imagined histories of their local towns and cities. Prophets, saints, Companions and descendants of the Prophet Muḥammad, and other devout Muslims populate these sprawling literary worlds. Local histories are interested in dynastic history and the events of successive dawla – or the reigns of dynasties and rulers – but they also describe the physical and spiritual contours of regional landscapes, including sacred sites and graves of the pious, while toponyms boast extraordinary and magical etymologies. These histories also record the human capital – teachers of religious sciences, holy men, and pious women – that the authors believed would place their city on the map of the Islamic world as a bona fide Muslim community of significance.

Trimmed like frivolous fat off the real meat of history that historians so often crave – names, dates, facts, and figures – accounts of dreams, myths, improbable etymologies, and dubious stories have generally been disregarded as fabulist embellishments created for literary effect. This historiographical study turns its attention to precisely such narratives that appear in local histories written about provinces and cities on the peripheries of Islamic empires that had their heartlands in Arabia, Syria, and Iraq. On close examination, these events and myths, which may have been fabricated or occurred only in the dream world, express profound truths about the people who wrote the histories and the times in which they lived.

READING LOCAL HISTORIES AS SOCIAL HISTORY

Fantastical historical narratives are especially useful for elucidating how Muslims on the peripheries of Islamic empires positioned themselves in relation to the central powers in the Middle East during critical periods between the tenth and early fifteenth centuries. Persian local histories composed during the tenth through early fifteenth centuries evidence a preoccupation with authority to rule and legitimacy as distinct religio-political communities. In so doing, these local histories participate in a discourse of authority and legitimacy.<sup>5</sup> For example, <sup>5</sup> For a detailed discussion of early Muslim attitudes toward lands and homelands and the conceptual framework of a discourse of place, see Zayde Antrim, Routes and Realms: The Power of Place in the Early Islamic World (New York: Oxford University Press, 2012).

Tārīkh-i Bukhārā, the book written by Narshakhī in the tenth century and then translated into Persian, extended, and then abridged during the twelfth century, relates Muḥammad's pronouncement that on the Judgment Day angels and martyrs will adorn the city of Bukhara in Khurasan, which is located in present day Uzbekistan. It will be resplendent with rubies and coral and will be the most exalted of all cities. Tārīkh-i Bayhaq, composed about the city of Bayhaq and its environs in Khurasan in the mid-twelfth century, tells us that descendants of a particular Companion of the Prophet Muḥammad lived and taught hadith in the city, despite evidence to the contrary in biographical sources. Other similar narratives of cities and regions, from Qum to Tabaristan (both located in modern-day Iran) bind specific cities to pivotal moments and characters in Islamic history.

What literary strategies did Persian writers use to weave these narratives into their histories and legitimate themselves within structures of authority in medieval Islam that were predominantly Arab and based largely on genealogies into which they did not fit? Following the Arab conquests, these individuals and communities had to forge new Muslim identities. This was a multi-layered process, since “to change overt religious identification was symbolically to die in one community and be reborn in another.”<sup>6</sup> How did Persians balance their multiple identities as Persians, Muslims, and members of various regional, provincial, ethnic, sectarian, ideological, and professional communities while writing these histories? Patterns within Islamo-Persiate writing from the peripheries of Islamic empires enable us to explore local structures of authority and legitimacy. The literary patterns that authors employed to bring the sanction and prestige of religious authority and importance to their respective cities and provinces are, in turn, vehicles through which to understand the more subtle societal conversations and anxieties that would have given rise to them in the first place.

For the local significance of topographical descriptions and an articulation of place and space in the massive twelfth century Syrian biographical dictionary and historical text, see Zayde Antrim, “Ibn ‘Asakir’s Representations of Syria and Damascus in the Introduction to the Ta’riḥ Madinat Dimashq,” IJMES 38: 1 (2006): 109–129.

<sup>6</sup> Richard Bulliet, “Conversion Stories in Early Islam,” in Conversion and Continuity: Indigenous Christian Communities in Islamic Lands: Eighth to Eighteenth Centuries, edited by Michael Gervers and Ramzi Jibran Bikhazi (Toronto: Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, 1990), 129; 131. Bulliet concludes that the initial decision to convert was driven more by the desire to improve or maintain one’s status in the shifting post-conquest dynamics than it was by faith and religious conviction.

6 Introduction

A privileged connection to Muḥammad is important and occurs in various forms: Muḥammad and other prophets visit the city in waking life or in dreams, hadith transmitters live and teach in the city as living virtues or merits (faḍā'il) and custodians of the faith, and Imams, Companions (ṣaḥāba), and descendants of the Prophet live and die in the region. These medieval authors also claim their territory as sanctified and hallowed ground in ways that are simultaneously localized and yet resonate with overarching notions of the Muslim umma. These texts evidence the dynamic of local histories making the global – the Muslim umma – locally and regionally differentiated. Local and regional histories are avenues that illustrate the formation of Muslim identity along the peripheries of medieval Islamic empires.

SOURCES

The central project of this book is to examine these rich and mysterious portions of early Islamic historical writing that involve dreams, prophets, saints, tangled genealogies, and fabulous etymologies and offer a new framework for considering them. It focuses most closely on annalistic Persian city and regional histories from the tenth to early fifteenth centuries. It also considers histories produced in another notable periphery, Anatolia, as a heuristic device to flesh out a comparative perspective. The political and social situations in Persia and Anatolia were distinct, and the two regions were Islamized at different times, in some areas centuries apart. Comparing Persia and Anatolia allows us to consider the underlying issue of how early medieval local histories on the peripheries framed and presented what constituted authority to rule, legitimacy as a Muslim, and legitimacy as political and religious communities with distinct practices and identities who nevertheless had an integral role in the broader umma.

The Persian local histories from the tenth to early fifteenth centuries analyzed in this book are Tārīkh-i Bukhārā, Tārīkh-i Bayhaq, Tārīkh-i Qum, Tārīkh-i Sīstān, and Tārīkh-i Tabaristān.<sup>7</sup> This study extends to Anatolian sources the questions and methodologies applied to Persian histories to explore al-Avāmīr al-‘alā’iyya fī al-umūr al-‘alā’iyya, Musāmarat al-akhbār va musāyarat al-akhyār, Tārīkh-i Āl-i Saljūq dar Ānātūlī, Saljūqnāma, and Abū Muslim-nāmāh. These texts were written in Persian or Arabic or both. Some sources were originally written in Arabic and later translated into Persian, some only surviving in this later translation. The term author includes editors, authors, compilers, translators, and individuals who made any substantive change – in content, form, order, or language – to a text. In this sense, all of these texts have multiple authors and are the product of many hands over the centuries, only some of whom are known and identifiable.

<sup>7</sup> Persian sources that fall beyond the chronological or structural framework of this study or are excluded from analysis include, most notably, Tarjama-i Mahāsin-i Isfahān, Tārīkh-i Rūyān, and Shīrāz-nāmah from the fourteenth century; Tārīkh-i Tabaristān va Rūyān va Māzandarān, Tārīkh-i Yazd, Tārīkh-i jadīd-i Yazd, and Rawzāt al-jannāt fi awṣāf-i madīnat-i Harāt from the fifteenth century; Tārīkh-i Khānī and Tārīkh-i Gīlān dar vaqāyī-i sālḥā-yi 923–1038 Hijrī Qamarī from the sixteenth century.

These texts are not simply histories but are also works of commemorative literature that evidence the dynamics, both rhetorical and physical, of the construction of authority to rule and legitimacy as a Muslim. Local histories are not only manifestations of “local pride,” as Rosenthal claims, but also express a deeply felt desire and need to embed a place into the global umma while simultaneously expressing a specifically local identity.<sup>8</sup> This wealth of previously underutilized sources illustrates the ways in which authors bind cities and regions to key moments and figures in Islamic and cosmic history and to prophetic authority. They also provide an opportunity to compare and contrast iterations of Islam that varied along and across lines of ethnicity and language in the medieval Islamic world. Local and regional histories from Persian and Anatolian areas exhibit a tendency to articulate an identity that is simultaneously local yet enmeshed within the broader Muslim umma, with its perceived heartlands in the Arab realms of Iraq, Syria, and Arabia.

CONCEPTUAL FRAMEWORKS

This project draws on theories and methods in historiography, social history, rhetoric, material culture, and literary criticism to identify the ways in which the authors of Persian local histories employed diverse but interrelated themes, strategies, and literary devices to portray the virtues of their cities. This in turn bound the region or city in question to key moments and characters in Islamic history. By embedding the city deep into the fabric of Islamic history and its continued development, the authors of these local histories fostered a sense of regionally specific and locally differentiated Persian Islamic identity in ways that “centered”

<sup>8</sup> Franz Rosenthal, A History of Muslim Historiography, 2nd revised edition (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1968), 150.

8 Introduction

these histories written on the ostensible “peripheries” of empire. Chapter 2 establishes the conceptual framework that provides the intellectual scaffolding for this project.

STRUCTURE AND CHAPTER SUMMARIES

This book traces and explains the emergence and use of themes and literary strategies that “centered” texts from “peripheral” regions from a variety of angles. The following chapters address ways in which authors of local histories composed in Persia during the tenth through early fifteenth centuries wove their lands and their communities into Islamic narratives rooted in the perceived Islamic heartlands of Iraq, Syria, and Arabia. Authors “centered” their cities and regions by including narratives about descendants of the Prophet associated with the region; incorporating narratives of legitimating dreams and visions; associating ṣaḥāba with the land; highlighting sites of pious visitation (ziyārat) and other sources of blessing or sacred power (baraka); and incorporating sacralizing etymologies.

Authors positioned their communities to better fit into the scope of Islamic history and claimed privileged connections to Muḥammad and divine or prophetic authority in various ways. Consequently, local histories from Persia both respond to and challenge assumptions about the centrality of Arabs, Arabic, Arabia, Iraq, Syria, ṣaḥāba, tābi’ūn, ‘Alids, sayyids, and sharifs while at the same claiming their own centeredness and importance within these same frameworks. These sources simultaneously accommodate, challenge, and reconfigure notions of what constitutes “central” or “peripheral” in the medieval Islamicate world.

Each chapter provides a prism through which to understand how authors “centered” their cities and regions by integrating specific themes and literary strategies into their works. Reading local histories with an eye to these literary strategies and how these local histories accommodated and challenged traditional structures of authority brings into the foreground the hybrid identities – globally Muslim and locally unique – of these communities on the peripheries of empire. Each chapter provides depth by exploring how the theme and literary strategy is reflected in local and regional histories. Each chapter also provides breadth by placing these specific claims to authority within their broader social and political contexts.

Chapter 2, Methodologies for Reading Hybrid Identities and Imagined Histories, situates this project within the literature and argues that the methodology proposed here is a compelling new way of reading narrative local histories. The long trajectory and strong influence of positivist history in scholarship on Islam has yielded many valuable insights, but it has failed to fully make use of the ostensibly data-poor aspects of histories, such as etymologies and dream narratives. Building on existing scholarly assumptions and insights gained from positivist history, this project demonstrates how a shift away from positivist history that has gained traction in recent decades opens up new possibilities of how to understand identity, rhetoric, and center-periphery relations. The methodology applied to Islamicate history has strong implications for medieval history, particularly European history. This chapter also assesses the genre of local historical writing, which lies on a spectrum from biographical dictionaries at one end to narrative chronicles on the other, and explains why this project's methodology is ideally suited for the narrative local histories examined here.

Chapter 3, Contexts and Authorship, brings into one cohesive chapter the contexts of the production of the five main texts analyzed in this study: Tārīkh-i Bukhārā, Tārīkh-i Bayhaq, Tārīkh-i Qum, Tārīkh-Sīstān, and Tārīkh-i Tabaristān. There are three levels of context that are integral to any discussion of these texts: relevant events that occurred during the texts' production at the level of the caliphate; events that occurred in the local area during the texts' production; and what we know about the author or translator, including whether the text was commissioned or written for a patron.

Chapter 4, Dreaming of the Prophet, examines dreams as tools of legitimation and offers a typology of dreams that emerges in Persian local histories. It contextualizes dreams in the framework of Persian and Arabic historical writing as well the Qur'an and hadith. Persian local and regional histories evidence a move to bypass genealogical affirmation and instead claim affirmation through dreams as an alternative investment of power. Claims of investments of power by pivotal characters – including the Prophet Muḥammad, pre-Islamic prophets, and holy men – create alternative avenues to genealogical legitimacy gained through descent from the ahl al-Bayt (family of the Prophet) and Companions of the Prophet and the subsequent generation (ṣahāba and tābi'ūn). Such connections to divine or prophetic authority occur through dreams or waking visions. The dreamscape of the city's denizens was a vibrant dimension of the medieval city, and dreams formed a liminal space where information about the sacred was transmitted. This chapter engages with the arguments, evidence, and theoretical frameworks about sainthood and dreams proposed by scholars of mysticism, who have generally been more attuned to the literary significance of dream narratives than positivist historians.

10 Introduction

Chapter 5, Holy Bloodlines, Prophetic Utterances, and Taxonomies of Belonging, moves from dreams about the Prophet to his descendants and utterances. It demonstrates how descendants of the Prophet functioned as legitimating devices in Persian local histories. Following Kazuo Morimoto and Theresa Bernheimer, this book defines as descendants the wide array of cross-sectarian individuals and families who claimed and were believed by their communities to enjoy kinship with the Prophet, a phenomenon that was both biological and socially constructed.<sup>9</sup> ‘Alids (al-‘Alawī), Hasanids, Husaynids, Talibids, sayyids, and sharifs are all ambiguous terms and phenomena, and the terms are used flexibly and with wide variation in the medieval sources themselves, especially in the medieval Islamic east of Iraq, Iran, Afghanistan, and Central Asia.<sup>10</sup>

These descendants – including but not limited to sayyids and sharifs – constitute the living virtues, or faḍā’il, of the land and become integral to the discourse of legitimation that these local histories construct through their form and content. This section also analyzes how hadith attributed to the Prophet or his descendants function as legitimating devices. It explains the significance in local histories of legitimating hadith, sometimes uttered by descendants of Muḥammad. A discussion of Moroccan shurafā’ adds a comparative dimension to the consideration of how the family of the Prophet is portrayed and integrated in Persianate histories.

Chapter 6, Living Virtues of the Land, charts the roles of the Companions of Muḥammad and the subsequent generation (ṣaḥāba and tābi’ūn) in local histories. Persian local histories claim connections with divine authority that tie the city or region to prophetic authority, which can occur in the form of ṣaḥāba and tābi’ūn living, teaching, or dying and being buried in the city. Companions and descendants of Muḥammad appear in Persian local histories as living virtues of the city and custodians of the faith who are tied to a particular place. This chapter also argues <sup>9</sup> Kazuo Morimoto and Theresa Bernheimer and their work on ‘Alids (Bernheimer) and sayyido-sharifology (Morimoto) and genealogies of the Prophet’s family provide the basis for my definition of these terms. See Kazuo Morimoto, “Toward the Formation of Sayyido-Sharifology: Questioning Accepted Fact,” Journal of Sophia Asian Studies 22 (2004): 87–103; Morimoto, ed., Sayyids and Sharifs in Muslim Societies: The Living Links to the Prophet (London and New York: Routledge, 2012); Teresa Bernheimer, The ‘Alids: The First Family of Islam, 750–1200 (Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press, 2013).

<sup>10</sup> Bernheimer, The ‘Alids, 2–4.

Index

- ‘Abbās I, Shah (Safavid Shah) (978–1038/1571–1629, r. 995–1037/1587–1629),
 192, 194–196
 Abbasids, 91, 134, 160, 162
abdāl, 84–85
 ‘Abd al-Rahman [b. Samora], 152–153
 Abū Muslim, 91
Abū Muslim-nāma, 7, 244
 ‘Aḍud al-Dawla Fana-Khusraw b. Rukn al-Dawla Ḥasan [b.] Buwayh (324–372/936–983), Buyid ruler, 134
Abl al-Bayt, 103, 114
 Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal, 162
akhbār, 149, 178
Akbbār al-dawla al-saljūqiyya by Ḥusaynī (1180–1225), 234
al-Avāmīr al-‘alā’iyya fī al-umūr al-‘alā’iyya
 by Ibn Bībī (d. ca. after 1285 or 1288
 CE), 7, 243–244
 Āl-i Bāvand family, 44
 ‘Alī b. Abī Ṭālib, 91, 102, 107, 113, 117, 130–131, 207
 ‘Alī b. al-Ḥusayn b. ‘Alī b. Abī Ṭālib (Zayn al-‘Ābidīn), 131
 ‘Alī b. Mūsa al-Riḍā, 8th Shi‘i Imam, 118, 169, 181, 183–184
 ‘Alids, 50, 53, 102–103, 108, 129, 136, 184 of Qum, 192
 ‘Alid loyalism, 128–129
 ‘Alids of Qum, 56–57, 110
 ‘Alids of Tabaristan, 88–90, 158–159,
 161, 214
 Alp Arslan, 227–228, 234
 al-‘Abbās bin Mirdās al-Sulamī, 141–148, 151
 ‘Amr b. Layth, 31, 58
 Āmu Daryā, 45
 Amul, 216
 Āmulī, Awliyā’ Allāh, author of Tārīkh-i
Rūyān (completed ca. 764/1362), 44
 Anatolia, 6, 221, 224–225, 231, 249
 Islamization of, 229–230
 Antrim, Zayde, 4, 18–19, 171
 Ash‘arī Arabs, 53–55, 110, 113–114,
 175–176, 183, 187–188, 192
 Ash‘arī, Abū Mūsā, al-, 117
 Authorship, 7, 29, 60
 Azad, Arezou, 23
 Baikandī, Muḥammad ibn Salām, 2
 Balkh, 23, 179, 216
 Bal‘amī, Abū ‘Alī (active ca. 946–973), author of Tārīkh-nāma, 40
 Banū Hāshim, 103
 Basra, 144, 174
 Bāwāndid family of Tabaristan and Gīlān,
 157–158, 165
 Bayhaq, 5, 49, 52, 142, 144, 147–148, 151
 Bayhaq-Sabzavār, 49–50
 Bayhaqī, Abū al-Faḍl Muḥammad ibn
 Ḥusayn, 24
 Bernheimer, Theresa, 102, 104
 biographical dictionaries, 13, 16, 20
 Bosworth, C. E., 61
 Bukhara, 1–2, 5, 44–46, 48, 75, 92, 94,
 96–97, 211–213

298 Index

- Bukhārī, 1
 Bukhārī, Khwāja Imām Abū Ḥafṣ, al-, 2, 92–96
 Bulliet, Richard, 3, 139
 Buyids, 19, 37, 54, 127
- Caspian, 42, 158–159
 Christianity, 180
   medieval European, 258
   saints, 196
 Christians
   in Anatolia, 230
   Orthodox Church, 230
 cities, 177
   foundation narratives of, 174–176 conversion to Islam, 37, 42 rates of, 36
 Crone, Patricia, 3
- Damascus, 62
 Daylam
   Daylami dynasties, 40, 43
 Dhahabī, Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad, al- (1274–1348), 149 dreams, 70–71, 76, 92, 97
   dream interpretation manuals, 82 dream narratives, 2, 72 dreams and hadīth, 77, 79–81 dreams and legitimation, 83, 97 dreams and mysticism, 73 dreams and sacred space, 71 dreams and the Qurʾān, 79 dreams as social history, 84 dreams of Muḥammad, 94 dreams that result in the establishment of a shrine, 71 dynasties local dynasties in Persia, 37, 40
- El-Hibri, Tayeb, 3, 21, 255
 etymologies, 176, 204–206, 210, 213–214
- faḍāʾil*, 67, 115, 160, 184
   living faḍāʾil, 164–165, 184
Faḍāʾil-i Balkh, 23
 Fakhr ud-Dawla b. Rukn al-Dawla, 20, 55
 Faṭḥ ʿAlī Shāh (1185–1250/1771–1834), 198
 Fāṭima bt. Muḥammad, 102, 107, 113
 Fāṭima of Qum, 99, 169, 177, 181, 183–187, 194, 196, 198, 202
- Flood, Finbarr Barry, 30, 121
furta sacra, 255, 257
- Gabriel, 1, 206, 212
 garrison cities, 174
 Gāvbāra, 158
 Geary, Patrick, 255, 258
 genealogies, 64, 104–105, 108, 121, 125–126, 146
 Ghazālī, Abū Hamīd, al- (d. 1111), 154
 Ghaznavids, 37, 233
 Ghurid sultanate, 126–127
- hadīth*, 5, 34, 97, 100–101, 115, 118, 120, 142, 144–145, 147, 150–151, 153, 212 hadīth transmission, 154, 207 local hadīth, 118–119
   Qum and, 115–118, 207
   Shiʿi hadīth, 115, 185, 188–192
 Ḥākim al-Nisābūrī, Muḥammad ibn ʿAbd Allāh, al- (933–1014), 147
 Harūn al-Rashīd, Abbasid caliph, 162
 Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, al-, 151–155
 Ḥasan b. ʿAlī al-ʿAskarī, al- (230 or 232–260/844 or 847–873), 11th Shiʿi Imam, 133–134
 Hasanids, 102
 histories, 247
   Anatolian, 247–248, 253
   dynastic histories, 4, 237 historical writing as a genre, 20 imagined histories, 32
   Local histories, 4, 6–7, 13–14, 16, 18, 20, 29, 39, 67, 180, 251–252 universal histories, 40
 Historiography 27
   methodologies, 7–8, 251, 254
   positivist approach to history, 2 quantitative history, 16
   skeptical methodologies, 17, 34
 Husaynids, 102
 hybrid identities, 3, 18, 30, 62, 66, 68
- Iblīs, 206
 Ibn ʿAbbād, 56–57
 Ibn ʿAsākir, 62
 Ibn Bābūya (or Bābawayhī), 190
 Ibn Bībī, 243
 Ibn Funduq, 49, 51–52, 151
 Ibn Hishām, 143

- Ibn Isfandiyyār, 43–44, 86, 129, 133, 162, 164, 199, 201
 Ibn Sa‘d, 144, 153
 Iran, 14–15
 Iranian identity, 68
 Iraq, 2
 Isfahan, 195
 Ismā‘il b. ‘Abbād b. al-‘Abbās b. ‘Abbād, 55, 57
istikhāra, 71
 Ja‘far al-Šādiq, 6th Shi‘a Imam, 99–100, 118, 182, 185–186
 Kay Kāwūs I, 228
 Kay Qubādh I, 228
 Kharijites, 58
 Khosrojird, 49, 143
 Khurasan, 5, 37, 44, 49–50, 212
 Khwarazm, 85, 90
 Köprülü, Mehmed Fuad, 231
 Kufa, 186
 Kulaynī, Muḥammad b. Ya‘qub, al- (d. 329/940–1), 190
 Kurdish dynasties, 40, 245
 Local dynasties, 127, 157
Maliknāma, 234
 Malikshāh b. Alp Arslan, 227, 234, 241–242
 Marwān b. Muḥammad b. Marwān b. al-Ḥakam, known as Marwān II (r. 127–132/744–750), 201
 Mashhad, 194, 196
 Mazandaran, 24, 215
 Mecca, 186
 Medina, 186
 Melville, Charles, 24 memory, 26, 210
   collective memory, 210
   theories of memory, 27
 metanarratives, 209
 Mittermaier, Amira, 32
mi‘rāj, 205, 209
 Morimoto, Kazuo, 104
 Morocco, 135–136
 Muḥammad, 1–2, 5–6, 8, 92, 94, 96, 98, 107, 205, 207, 209, 212
 Muḥammad b. ‘Alī, 5th Shi‘a Imam, 131
 Mukhtar b. Abi ‘Ubayd Thaqafi, 53
 Mūlay Idrīs I, 136
 Mūlay Isma‘il (r. 1672–1727), Sultan of Morocco, 135
 Muqaddasī, Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad, al- (b. ca. 946, also vocalized as al-Maqdisī), 55, 156, 169, 193, 211–212
Musāmarat al-akbbār va musāyarat al-akbyār (“Night-time narratives and keeping up wit the good”) by Karīm al-Dīn Maḥmūd b. Muḥammad Āqsarā‘ī (14th century, d. ca. between 1323–33 CE), 7, 232, 239
 Mutawakkil, al-Abbasid caliph, 134 myths, 209 role in culture-making, 169
naqīb al-ashraf, 108
 Narshakhī, Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Ja‘far ibn Zakariyā ibn Khaṭṭāb ibn Sharīk, al-, 2, 46, 92
 Nidhām al-Dīn Sam‘ānī, 85, 90
niqāba, 108–109
 Nishapur, 52, 139, 147
 Noah, 206
 Nūḥ ibn Naṣr, 46, 48, 92
 Ottomans, 239
 Oxus River, 45
 patricians, 139
 peripheries, 4, 8, 19, 68, 172 center-periphery dynamics, 31
 Persia, 14
 Persians
   Persian identity, 38
 piety, 202
 Pourshariati, Parvaneh, 23, 140, 148
 Pratt, Mary Louise, 25
 Prophet Muḥammad, 1 prophets, 67
 Qādiriyya Sufi order
   Qādiriyya Būdshishiyya in Morocco, 136
 Qilij Arslan, 242
 Qilij Arslan II (ibn Mas‘ūd), 242
 Qubavī, Abū Naṣr Aḥmad, al-, 47
 Qum, 53–54, 99, 110, 112, 115, 169, 175–176, 181, 183–187, 194, 196, 198, 204–207
   Arab conquest of, 175–177
 Qummī, Hasan b. Muḥammad b. Hasan, al- (d. 1015 or 16), 55, 101, 110, 176

300 Index

- Qummī, Ḥasan b. ‘Alī b. Ḥasan b. ‘Abd al-Malik, al-, 56
 Qur’an, 2, 96, 118
   Samarqand Codex of the Qur’an, 95
 Qutayba b. Muslim, 45, 63
 Qutlumush b. Arslan Isrā’īl, 228
- Rabī’ al-Ḥārethī, 152
Rāḥat al-Ṣudūr wa āyat al-surūr, 232 Relics, 173, 201, 256, 258
 revolts, 54
rustāq, 45, 49
 Ruyan, 216
- sacred space, 172
 Saffarids, 37, 58–59
ṣaḥāba, 53, 138–139, 142, 148, 157, 180, 257 Saḥnūn b. Sa’īd (d. 854), 154
 saints, 136, 155, 180–181, 197, 199–200
   burial near, 197
   sainthood, 155, 182
Saljūqnāma, 7
Saljūq-nāma of Zahīr al-Dīn Nīshāpūrī (d. ca. 1184 or 1185), 232, 235–236
 Salmān al-Fārisī, 123–125, 212–213
 Samanids, 37, 46–47, 127
 Samarqand, 45, 95
Samā’ reading certificates, 61
 Savant, Sarah Bowen, 15, 25–26, 39, 104, 122–123
sayyido-sharifology, 50, 104, 106, 108–109 sayyids, 101–103, 107, 113, 129, 132, 135, 157, 161, 183
 Seljuqs, 222, 248, 253
   Great Seljuqs of Iran and Iraq, 226–227, 232, 234, 238
   Oghuzz Turkmen, 231–232
   origins of, 225–226
   Seljuq historiography, 230–232, 237
   Seljuqs of Rūm, 224, 227–229, 236–238, 241, 244, 249
 semiotics, 257
Shāhnāma, 126
Sharafnāma, 245
sharifs, 101, 103, 107, 135
 Shi’a, 99
 Shi’ism, 50, 66, 115, 129–130, 181
   in Qum, 187–193
   in Tabaristan, 90
 shrines, 183, 194
- Shu’ūbiyya movement, 38–39
 Sistan, 57–58, 152, 154
 Sogdia, 45
 Sogdian, 211
 Sufis, 199
 Sufism, 136
 Sulaymān b. Qutlumush b. Arslan Isrā’īl, 229 symbols, 179
   as signifiers, 179
 Syr Daryā, 45
 Syria, 62
- Ṭabarī, Muḥammad Jarīr, al- (d. 310/923), 40, 125, 166, 255
 Tabaristan, 43, 129, 131–132, 157–158, 160, 162, 164, 166, 200–201, 214–216, 218 conquest of, 158–160
   Tabaristan and sayyids, 132–135
tābi’ūn, 53, 138, 142, 157
 Tahirids, 37, 45, 127
 Talibids, 103
Tārīkh al-Rusul wa al-Mulūk, 40
Tārīkh Baghdād, 96
Tārīkh-Bayhaq, 51–52
Tārīkh-i Āl-i Saljūq dar Ānatīlī, 7, 232, 240–241
Tārīkh-i Bayhaq, 5–6, 42, 50, 140–141, 143, 145, 147–148, 150–151
Tārīkh-i Bayhaqī, 24
Tārīkh-i Bukhārā, 2, 5–6, 42, 46, 63, 92–93, 96, 98, 211, 213
Tārīkh-i Jadīd-i Yazd, 202, 248
Tārīkh-i Mas’ūdī by Bayhaqī, 233
Tārīkh-i Qum, 6, 13, 20, 42, 54–56, 63, 99, 101, 109–115, 118, 137, 176, 183, 202, 204–206
Tārīkh-i Rūyān, 44
Tārīkh-i Sīstān, 59, 61, 151
Tārīkh-i Ṭabaristān, 6, 13, 42–44, 84, 87, 90, 92, 130, 156–157, 159, 161, 172, 199, 214, 217
Tārīkh-nāma, 40
Tārīkh-Sīstān, 6, 42
 taxes, 65, 162
 topoi
   culturally recognizable symbols, 178
 Translators and translations, 47, 57 transmission of knowledge, 57
 Transoxania, 95

Index

301

- Tughril Beg, 227, 234
 Turks, 220, 247, 254
   Oghuzz Turkmen, 50, 225–226, 253
   Turkification, 249
- ulama*, 139, 155, 166
- ‘Umar b. ‘Abd al-‘Azīz, Umayyad caliph
   (‘Umar II, r. 99–101/717–720, d. 101/
   720), 85–86, 92, 129, 131
- ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, (Umar I, r. 13–23/
 634–644, 85, 87, 89, 92
- urban environment, 170–171
- Uzbekistan, 1, 5
- visions, 71
- Waldman, Marilyn, 24–25
- Wandād-Hurmuzd, Qārinid prince, 162
- White, Hayden, 27–28, 207
- Yazdigird III, 158
- Ya‘qūb b. Layth, 58
- Zahhāk, 61, 126
- Zarang, 58
- Zaydis
   Zaydi state in Tabaristan, 43
   Zaydi ‘Alids, 43, 50
- ziyārat*, 181, 183, 196–197
- Zoroastrianism
   Zoroastrian fire-temples, 114, 184